Greetings!... I can be reached at KristaDandridgeBarnett@gmail.com and/or 707.592.7717 with regards to concerns I have with respect to Copyright laws that appear to conflict, as well as with respect to non-attorney examiners at the Copyright office appearing to examine work in which one would suppose an attorney to examine (considering the apparent practices of the Copyright office).

It is my opinion that certain law regarding Copyright is mired in conflict with other law. Additionally, it appears the Copyright office is strongholding authors of work to have to identify the work in a way that is possibly in conflict with the author and/or in conflict to what the work actually is.

Another conversation:

With regards to Supplementary Registration, PA0002410844, and consideration of "Please Note: If you are correcting or amplifying a registration for a group of unpublished works or a group of short online literary works, or a group of works published on the same album, you must contact the Copyright Office before you submit this application. You can reach the Office by email or by telephone at (202) 707-3000 or (877) 476-0778", the Library of Congress may contact me as a result of the Copyright office appearing to deem my asking certain questions as seeking legal advice?

~Respectfully,

Krista Dandridge-Barnett
